Congressman Miller's Statement on Debt Limit Increase Disapproval Resolution

WASHINGTON, DC – Today, the House of Representatives passed a Joint Resolution of Disapproval of the President's authority to increase the federal debt limit by an additional $500 billion.

Following the vote, Congressman Gary Miller issued this statement:

“While it was far from perfect, the debt ceiling law passed this summer began the process of restoring fiscal discipline in Washington by forcing Congress to make the difficult spending decisions and structural changes necessary to address our nation's long-term economic challenges. Unfortunately, the President's call for even more spending on short-term stimulus measures and hiking taxes on American families and employers to pay for them shows that he just doesn't get it.

I strongly supported the joint resolution today to send a signal to the Administration that we will not return to the days of profligate spending and borrowing on the backs of future generations of Americans. To restore certainty to this economy and foster job creation and growth, we need to cut up the nation's credit card, live within our means, and remove the looming threat of tax hikes on our nation's job creators.”
